SNOW AT NIGHT

Augusta Wray

The snow falls like ghost-stars and lights the pines
 With a pale luminosity that sheds
 A radiance over the quiet woods.
 It clings to the fringed branches with fingers Soft as silence. No life nor any sound Disturbs the scene, only the falling stars
 Of snow, weaving a thick, warm, white blanket
 To spread over the cold arms of the trees, Outstretched as if to hold back the crouching Darkness of the night; the frozen crystals Glow calmly, without substance or shadow,
 Until a white shroud blots out the landscape.

A temporary work of art, with no two alike, what is that covering our campus in white?

If you guessed snowflakes then you are right, but...

According to chairperson of the Caltech Physics department, Kenneth G. Libbrecht, the proper term should actually be “snow crystals.” different categories of snow crystals, go to:
